Key knowledge

Factors that contribute to urban growth include economic opportunities, transport, technology and growth in industry.

Rural areas are sparsely populated, whereas urban areas are densely populated so more people live there.

Rural to urban migration means people are moving from the countryside to towns and cities. People leave villages or farms (rural areas) to live in cities (urban areas). They often move to find jobs, schools, or better services.

Cities can have a big impact on the environment, for example pollution or deforestation. Many cities are implementing sustainable city initiatives to help lessen the impact.

A planned city is built using a design or plan before people move in. Roads, buildings, parks, and schools are carefully placed. Examples include Milton Keynes in England and Brasilia in Brazil.

A historically grown city started a long time ago and grew slowly over time. They grew as more people came. Examples include London in England or Paris in France.
